

Open Position

October 2015

Scientific Communication Officer

The Food Packaging Forum is a charitable foundation based in Zurich, Switzerland. We communicate high quality scientific information about chemicals and health, with a focus on food contact materials. Further, we enable a dialogue between the different professional stakeholders (industry, regulatory, academic, public interest and media).

The Food Packaging Forum currently is looking for a trained scientist (PhD) with expertise in toxicology, epidemiology, life sciences, material sciences or related areas to work in our team in Zurich as Scientific Communication Officer (80% part time). The ideal candidate has excellent English language skills (native speaker) and speaks German as well as other languages, likes to write and speak in public, is a team player, has experience in science communication, enjoys making complex scientific matters accessible to experts and non-experts, can quickly access novel scientific information, and is highly motivated to serve public interests. We offer a competitive salary and an exciting position at the interface of science, policy and industry. Please address your application to info@fp-forum.org.